the new malware was discovered by researchers with visas payment fraud disruption (pfd) initiative in february 2020 while analyzing a command and control (c2) server that was previously observed hosting the imageid skimmer variant. although the skimmer itself is basic and contains features common for many e-commerce skimming kits, such as data exfiltration using image requests and configurable target form fields, baka has some advanced capabilities suggesting it was developed by a skilled malware author. it follows a unique obfuscation method and loader to import its skimming code and install within the site. and when it realizes a change in dynamic analysis of developer tools or done exfiltrating, it deletes itself. visa says the the skimming payload decrypts to javascript written to resemble code that would be used to render pages dynamically. the actual baka skimmer program, baka.loader.exe, is located in c:\program files

(x86)\convertdib\baka.exe. however, the program does not automatically run. its main purpose is to send malicious commands to the c2 server, which is hosted on the same computer and has been compromised by criminals. all these commands are executed by the program baka. the main elements of the c2 server are a number of files, as well as a configuration file called baka.loader.exe.config. the configuration file contains several hidden fields, which are used to specify information about the specific c2 server and its configuration. while this may seem like good news, as long as apple keeps rejecting applications that claim to be "legitimate" and jailbreakable for use on ios 9.3.3 devices, it will not impact the security of this jailbreak.todesco's loader, along with the current pangu ios 9.3 jailbreak is not able to run on ios 9.3 devices, and it has not been updated to support the ios 10.2 release, which does not have security improvements that will affect jailbreakability.
